

Evaluation of the tagger and the corpora

Evaluation of the Trump corpus

The tags of 100 sentences of the Trump corpus were tested. These are 1601 in total. 73 of them were tagged incorrectly by the Stanford tagger. Consequently, the accuracy is 95.44 %. Even if this rate seems quite good, the errors can lead to problems. There are 46 sentences in which there was at least one wrong tag. The number of incorrect tags per sentence lies between 0 and 6. Table 1 shows their distribution.

Table 1: Number of incorrect tags per sentence and their distribution (Trump corpus)

Number of incorrect tags per sentence	0	1	2	3	4	6
Sentences with that number of incorrect tags	54	32	6	5	2	1

Almost half of the tested sentences include at least one incorrect POS tag, which means that the sentence structure is distorted, which could influence the output negatively. Moreover, the tagger assigns incorrect tags to the words. A list of the incorrectly tagged words is shown in Table 2.

When generating the text, all these words could be chosen incorrectly as the output for their assigned POS tag and cause ungrammatical sentences that do not make sense. Especially the amount of words tagged as proper nouns is relatively high. This occurred frequently due to the capitalization of these words. In addition, words with mistakes made by the author are a general problem for the tagger and consequently for the output.

There are also words that could be tagged in the way which is incorrect here, e.g. call could be a VBP but occurs in the tested sentence as a noun. In this case, they are not problematic when being chosen as the output, but still pose a problem for the tag sequences.

In conclusion, although 95% accuracy is quite good for a tagger, it is still not quite good enough for text generation in this current model, as every error leads to distorted output words and/or sentence structures.

Evaluation of the Topic corpus

The tags of 100 sentences of the Topic corpus were tested. These are 1353 in total. 105 of them were tagged incorrectly by the Stanford tagger. Consequently, the accuracy is 92.24 %. There are 55 sentences in which there was at least one wrong tag. So, the tagging of the Topic corpus is worse than that of the Trump corpus. The number of incorrect tags per sentence lies between 0 and 5. Table 3 shows their distribution.

Table 3: Number of incorrect tags per sentence and their distribution (Topic corpus)

Number of incorrect tags per sentence	0	1	2	3	4	5
Sentences with that number of incorrect tags	45	26	15	9	3	2

More than half of the tested sentences include at least one incorrect POS tag, which means that the sentence structure is distorted, which could influence the output negatively. Moreover, the tagger assigns incorrect tags to the words. A list of the incorrectly tagged words is shown in Table 4.

The number of words erroneously tagged as NNP is even higher in the Topic corpus. The reason for that and in general for the higher amount of mistakes is the more colloquial input consisting of slang words and abbreviations as well as words and whole sentences in foreign languages which could not be filtered out.

Incorrect tags in the Topic corpus have a direct influence on the output. As a result, words could be chosen as part of the output even if they are not actually the desired part of speech. This makes it highly unlikely that the sentence will still be considered grammatical, which in turn decreases the likelihood of producing a sentence with semantic sense.
